Director's Message

Thank you all for coming and supporting our October production.

There is no need to say too much about the play as most people will know something about it.

I am really enthusiastic about this production as I have not directed a serious drama since The Miracle Worker as I have been concentrating on comedies, Stage Struck and A Magical Christmas to name just two.

This production is based on a Constance Cox dramatisation, and I am sure some of you will remember her from the drama series that used to be on BBC on Sunday evenings. I read a few scripts, but this one with the slightly more old-fashioned English seemed to capture the mood of this period beautifully. The genteel ladies, the dark and moody yet compelling Mr. Rochester, and the simplicity of Jane all come to life before you.

I am sure you will recognise some of our regulars on stage but it will be nice for you to see some new faces, mainly Alan Springham, who takes over the formidable Mr Rochester in his first major acting role.

I sincerely hope you enjoy your evening and can melt into the atmosphere of this lovely English drama. Don't forget new members are always welcome.

The Play & Its Author

The wonderful novel by Charlotte Brontë needs no introduction - indeed it has been produced in films and on television many times. This play is adapted from the highly successful Television Serial first televised by the B.B.C. during February and March 1956 with Daphne Slater as Jane Eyre and Stanley Baker as Rochester.

That production was also voted by viewers the best play of the year on either channel and was given the News Chronicle Award for 1956.

The adaption for television was by Constance Cox (1912 - 1998) who was a British script writer who specialised in adapting books by Charles Dickens and other classical literature. She was born in Surrey and was one of the first writers to adapt for TV. Pickwick Papers was written for television for the first time by her in 1977. In all she adapted or wrote twenty two plays.

This Play was first produced on stage on July 9th 1956 at Her Majesty's Theatre, Carlisle.

The play takes place during the period 1847-1848 and the scene throughout is the Drawing Room at Thornfield Hall
